WHO'S TALKING WHERE?

If Charleston's monuments could talk, what stories would they tell? Charleston Stories invites you to experience this historic city in a new, contemporary way: LISTEN PLEASE!!!

Across the Charleston area, a number of statues and markers have been given the gift of speech. From The Grimke Sisters to Robert Smalls - who sailed to freedom - each has a story to tell. Together their history tells their chapter of Charleston's story.

Combining historical accuracy and mobile technology, Charleston Stories introduces a new way to explore the remarkable American city, a way to hear what each statue or marker has to say. Just pay them a visit, then swipe your smartphone on the nearby QR sign and presto: you get a call back from the statue or monument!

In collaboration with the Charleston History Commission the monologues have been researched and have been written and recorded by volunteers many from Charleston's communities. Ultimately, Charleston Stories aims to bring a community together by sharing factually accurate history about Charleston and its historically important individuals and places. History can not be changed. Charleston Stories aims to offer an accurate contemporary perspective of the city's diverse culture and personalities.

Charleston Stories is funded by The Rainbow Group and is co-produced by Sing London, who brought TALKING STATUES to the world. Charleston Stories opens on 21st May 2018 and runs for a minimum of two years.
